

THE COVID-19 PANDEMIC

On Friday, March 13, 2020, we sent staff home from the foundation offices, telling them to expect to work virtually for a short time. A new coronavirus had begun circling the globe with disturbing results. We were concerned with protecting the health and safety of our staff and the people we serve.

This past March, we marked the two-year anniversary of that day, with the foundation staff returning to the office this week. This pandemic has taken an enormous toll on all of us. Nearly one million people in our country have died from the COVID-19 virus to date, with almost 2,000 of those in Delaware County alone.

While the pandemic brought out a lot of emotions in us all - stress, fear, anger, anxiety, sadness - it also brought out the best in so many of us. Countless people stepped up to support their neighbors: providing food to hungry families, gratitude to our frontline workers, and comforting those grieving the loss of loved ones. 3,000 Delaware County residents volunteered at local vaccine sites. Below is a glimpse of how we at the foundation and others in our community responded to the COVID-19 pandemic.

A World in Crisis

While the pandemic impacted so many of our vulnerable residents, it also showed us how powerful our community is in coming together to help those in need, neighbors caring for neighbors.
